Railway Digest

Cites Editorial

Published Here

An editorial published in the Herald on Aug. 23 citing the stakes of every American in the success of railroads has been cited in the October issue of the Railway Digest.

"It is popular thoughtlessness to regard the railroads as big fellows who can take care of themselves," the editorial said in part. "Actually, every American has a stake in the success of railroads and should understand that they cannot operate unprofitably without their losses being reflected in the whole economy of the country."

The Railway Digest, which quoted the Herald editorial, is published monthly by the Association of American Railroads.
